New Website Lets Storage Customers Pick Price

Upickstorage.com is on line. Upickstorage.com has chosen California to be its pilot market. California has a strong and robust storage market which is uniquely situated for testing the launch of the website. Customers looking for airline tickets and hotels have been able to name their price on line for some time. Now people searching for self storage for their goods can name their price. In addition to naming their price consumers also have flexibility to choose size, location and climate of their desired storage. Customers fill out a simple and quick form describing their ideal storage unit and then Upickstorage.com submits the offer to all the storage facilities that meet the description or exact search criteria.

“We wanted to create a website that would help both the facility owner and the customer. By creating new customers and traffic for the facility, we are helping the proprietors and by allowing customers to electronically find their own unit at their own price we are helping the customer. It’s the perfect site for both the proprietors and the consumers. In the current economic climate being able to negotiate a lower price for any product is a bonus, but now for the first time people can find the storage they need for the price they want to pay.” Arlen Braud, President and Creator of Upickstorage.com
